Computers are also playing a part. Swapping electronic data, which allows customers and suppliers to share business documents in a few seconds, is proving so popular that many big companies are shunning non-users. Tesco, a British supermarket chain, will not deal with suppliers who are not part of its new automated system for ordering and paying for products. Most grocery stores are experimenting with electronic gizmos at the check-out which automatically re-order whatever goods are sold.

But why stop with information about...
